DiscussIT Topic 6: Where is our country headed?

Discuss IT Topic: Over the last week, our country has had growing concerns on immigration bans, border safety, and executive orders that remind us of issues that have been plaguing our country for years. Now that Trump has been elected President, there has been people threatening to blow up the White House, human right protests, and a plethora of other sensitive subject matters that are very compelling to individual groups of people. Why have these issues come up now as we head into a time in which it seems no one is going to be happy with the outcomes? Will this create a split in this country and place citizens against one another when it comes to their views? In your opinion, what other topics are at the forefront of concern? Explain...

Response: Please make sure all grammar, spelling, indentation, and punctuation is correct.

These issues have come up because people have finally found out that if they want to change something, they have to speak up. People have also learned to use social media to their advantage. Maybe no one is going to be happy with the outcomes, but they should be happy that they finally contributed to being a part of this country, where the people should come first. I think that it is good to have a debate once in a while for what you believe in. Creating a split in this country should be a good thing, but it cannot have violence. Violence is what ruins the whole protest process. If there was no violence in these protests, politicians and people in power will take the protests more seriously and try to listen to what the protesters want to say.

In my opinion, the topics that should be at the forefront of concern shouldn't be people threatening to blow up the White House, or that President Trump is an awful president, (even though he's been in power for about a month,). The topics should be about who is going to be appointed to the EPA advisor, or who is going to be chosen for Secretary of State. The topics should be about what is happening to this country, that was once big and strong, not the people in this country that won't do anything to change the bad things happening to this country.
